

Industry, Nonprofit and Government Job Boards

Find thousands of jobs and internships on and off-campus, many of which are applicable to grad students. Handshake is used by hundreds of universities across the country and hundreds of thousands of employers.

Not a job board but a great site for finding all the employers affiliated with a certain industry in a specific state or city. For example "Statistics" and "Texas" brings up 4,000+ employers sorted by size of company and location. A good resource for networking with employers who don't post to the major job boards.

Indeed lists thousands of employment opportunities, and you can filter your preferences by industry and location. Mac's List is specific to the Northwest.

USAJobs.gov is where all federal government jobs are listed (Department of Fish and Wildlife, NASA, FBI, Department of Energy, etc.). It includes unique experiences for current students and recent graduates. Note that state, county and local government positions are typically listed on their own websites (e.g., State of California jobs is calcareers.ca.gov).

Idealist and Work for Good are examples of places to look for nonprofit jobs. The Nonprofit Association of Oregon also has a regional database for nonprofit work opportunities.

Another way to find jobs is to work with a hiring or temp agency, which is usually free to applicants. CampusPoint is an example of a Northwest-based company that focuses on placing current students and recent graduates with local companies.

Accessed through Handshake under 'Resources,' GoinGlobal is a tool that lists over 16 million jobs worldwide as well as city and country-specific application guides. (Note that jobs are not vetted before posting for legitimacy.)
